THE RING & THE SLIPPER.

Charles felt blue. His first advance had been rejected. What should he do? Keep the money? He could think of it. At last a bright thought entered his mind. He would take the money, and, putting more with it, buy some little token for Prudence.

On the next day when they met, Charles taking her hand, slipped a ring quickly upon one of her fingers. Prudence blushed, and Charles blushed—the shoemaker's wife laughed. Prudence hastily left the room and Charles went to his work.

The little circumstance of the ring and the slippers had awakened new thoughts and feelings in our hero and heroine.

Charles was happy as it was, but with Prudence many thoughts passed quickly through her mind and struggled one with the other. Her parents must not see the ring. Quakers did not tolerate jewelry, but then it was unlucky to take it off, and her superstition got the better of her parental obedience.

With her hand carried carefully under her apron, Prudence went about the house all day, but at supper time, forgetful of the ring, she reached out her arm to pass the tea, and the ring was discovered.

"Prudence go to thy room," said the father.

"Prudence, hast thou forsaken the faith thou wast bred in, and gone over to the world?" chimed in the mother, and Prudence sought her own apartment.

After supper was finished, both parents went to Prudence and extorted, and entreated, and commanded her to tell where she got the ring, and to take it off. Her only answer was, "it would be unlucky, I cannot do it."—Here was a pretty fix. Jewelry worn and parental authority disobeyed, and by one rigidly brought up in the faith, and blessed with a name that ought to have been a barrier against all such worldly ways. Day after day the parents attempted to regain their authority, but to no purpose, and as a last resort, Farmer N. determined to lay the affix before the church. A meeting was called of the elders, and Prudence was arraigned before that tribunal which has caused so much terror to many a succeeding Quaker. The regularly ordained preacher exhorted. Those whom the spirit moved drawled out their opinion of the heinousness of Prudence's crime. The old women, stretched forth long and unadorned hands in supplication to her, and the old men desisted ever having given love tokens in their youth, and dwelt upon the folly of wearing jewelry.—She could imagine something of the same kind through the most prominent part of the farmer's face, by which she managed him.

"Prudence," said the presiding elder, "the spirit hath moved me to speak unto thee, and inasmuch as thou hast lost thy faith, to denounce thy course and pray for thy speedy return unto the doctrines of filial obedience, and that simplicity of dress which shuns jewelry and fine raiment, and robes itself in the sober colors of thy sect. And for the young man to whom thy spirit cleaves, he is of the world's people, and not for such as thee to consort with, lest, peradventure, thou should come to evil and thy days be numbered, and the hair of thy parents when it is turned gray be brought in sorrow to the grave."

"Thy people have ordained that thee be sent to Providence, and trained in the ways which thou shouldst journey in, by the discreet teachers whom the spirit has placed over that excellent institution, and if thou art found in New Bedford after next second day, the society will excommunicate thee, and withdraw its precious influence over thy soul."

Poor Prudence! Love she had not before thought of but now it sprang up strongly within her. Persecution (for she thought she was persecuted) wakened her heart from its timidity, and it beat loudly for the one who had placed that ring upon her finger. She had gone to the church in the slippers which he had made, and now she had returned, they were too precious ever again to be worn. That ring, whose sole advocate had been superstition, now had love to plead for its remaining upon her finger. Under the support of the first, it had withstood farther, mother, and the society; under the joint influence of the two, it would bid defiance to the world.

Poor Charles! No, not poor, he had accomplished his purpose.—Prudence loved him and might yet be his. The banner, as it fell briskly and heavily upon the stone in his lap, told of the stroke he most make for fortune, and the well waxed thread, as he drew it through his work, sung of the happy termination of his labors.

Soon after dinner, and Prudence was sent to Providence, the two long years had to be spent, saving the golden ring, and the ring was presented to the Society of Friends, a varying opinion of the value of the ring was expressed, and the ring was sold like the diamond, since the brighter from the cut it had received.

For the first year after the departure of Prudence, Charles continued to work at the bench; but after that time, the qualities of industry and honesty which he possessed won for him the good opinion of merchant in a neighboring city, and he was offered a place in his counting-room. When the three years had passed away, Charles was admitted into the firm, and the intellectual energy of his character had won for him a high place in the opinion of his townsmen.

The Quaker society, in the meantime, began to decline. Coats, with their tails a trifle shorter; bonnets, the scoop of which was not quite so deep, made their appearance within their walls each Sunday, and the stolid parents which separated the sexes were seen closed.

The elders nodded to each other with becoming gravity while they slept, but the young ones sauntered across the house, and indulged in dreams more fanciful than Somnus ever inspired.—Great thigh bands of hurraing boys, and singing girls swept noisily by, and far into the stillness of the quiet country, and the Newport Carnival was at its height. Matches it is said are made in Heaven, it is also true they are made in shiggy-sides, but with the starry heavens above, and the gliding sleigh below, we fancy many a twain are in de one. So may it be.

Prudence returned. Farmer N. saw the ring upon her finger, and his wife saw it, too. Quaker beaux called and went away. Charles called, but did not depart until the day was fixed, and the reluctant consent of the farmer and his wife obtained.

Many a yearly Meeting has been celebrated since they were married, but the ring still rests upon Prudence's finger, and the slippers are still preserved, in remembrance of her love and trials, and when the children crowd around Charles in the evening, they do not have to coax much to make father tell them the story of the Ring and Slippers.

FRIDAY MORNING, MARCH 12, 1858.

The Old Granite State.

The Annual Election for Governor and other State officers of New Hampshire took place on Tuesday, the 9th inst., being the first of a series of political battles which will be fought during the year 1858, and occurring at this particular juncture of national affairs—when the Administration at Washington are moving all the powers of the earth and all the powers beneath the earth, to enlist the sentiments of the people in favor of its high-handed and unprincipled principle that the first blow is a gain of half.

He died on the 21st inst. "We notice that the shipping in our harbor are at half mast to-day out of respect to the memory of Capt. Charles G. Freeman, commander of the brig S. P. Brown, engaged in the trade between this port and the island of Cuba.

Capt. Freeman, who died at Havana on the 19th of Feb'y, of small pox, aged about 43 years a native of Denmark, but for the last 23 years a citizen of Newport, R.I., where he left a wife and children, and died on the 21st inst.

He had port for a number of years, and by his uniform kindness and gentlemanly deportment had made a large number of friends, by whom his death is deeply regretted.

All who knew him speak of him as a good officer and a clever man."

A PLEA FOR THE PACHA.—In the name of humanity, good people, have mercy upon the Turk. He is a gentleman and a scholar, and entitled to be treated as such. Though a Mussulman in faith, he is as good a Christian in practice as the best of us, so far as the amanities of social intercourse are concerned. Do not crowd him to death. Let him be the owner of himself for at least an hour or two out of the 24. Refrain from delivering complimentary speeches at him, not one word of which he can understand without an interpreter.

Leave him to his wife and children, and let him go to Constantinople.

Who knows but that he may take it into his head to write a book?

In that case we may be doing some things just now which would not read very well in print.

Good motives do not always excuse bad manners.

True hospitality and true politeness should endeavor to make the objects of them as happy, not as miserable, as possible.

LOCAL NEWS.

Wednesday, and the day before, there was good sleighing, we do not dare to say yesterday, for three days together of such sport is more than we ought to enumerate, now that the warm water of the Gulf Stream is close by us. By the bye, we used to be told that the celebrated Stream was 35 miles out from the end of this land, and are now told that it runs 40 miles nearer us than formerly! How is this?

But the sleighing: that was fine! and though the air was soft and mild, and the sun shone but too warmly on the snow, so that the shy flakes crept silently away from its fervor, and dissolved, yet with the evening the frost came, and checked their play, then did the merry jingle of bells fill the air, and the old wooden town rang with peals of laughter and peals of bells, each striving to be merrier than the other.—Great thigh bands of hurraing boys, and singing girls swept noisily by, and far into the stillness of the quiet country, and the Newport Carnival was at its height. Matches it is said are made in Heaven, it is also true they are made in shiggy-sides, but with the starry heavens above, and the gliding sleigh below, we fancy many a twain are in de one. So may it be.

We regret to learn that the schooner Ceylon, Capt. Jackson of this port, owned by Messrs. Finch & Finga became a total loss on Saturday morning last by striking on a reef in Penobscot Bay and sinking in twenty-five fathoms of water, the Captain and crew saved themselves in a boat. Her cargo consisted of Lime. The Ceylon was a good vessel but was not insured.

The New York mail of yesterday, was carried on to New Bedford by mistake, and the mail for that city left here; consequently we had to depend upon friend Tilley of the News Depot, for New York papers of Wednesday, and he has our thanks for a liberal supply.—The mail returned from New Bedford in the Fall River boat at 9 o'clock last evening and was immediately opened and its contents distributed.

We clip the following just tribute to the memory of one who was well known in our community from the "Wilmington (N. C.) Journal" of the 2d inst. "We notice that the shipping in our harbor are at half mast to-day out of respect to the memory of Capt. Charles G. Freeman, commander of the brig S. P. Brown, engaged in the trade between this port and the island of Cuba.

A GERMAN girl living in service on the West Side, (Cleveland,) last week, gave birth to four children at once. Two were boys and two were girls. One of each sex was still born, but the other two are alive.

This is piling it on rather fast for a girl that has not yet found a husband, and we doubt if any man can be found ready to take her to wife.

REVIVALS IN NEW JERSEY.—The Trenton Gazette says:—"We understand that about eleven hundred persons have professed conversion, and have been received as members of the Methodist Episcopal Church within the bounds of what is known as the Trenton District, during the late fall and winter."

the superiority of the beef entirely to the

DIED.

A PRIZE ESSAY ON ADVERTISING.—Mr. Bonner, of the N. Y. Ledger, whose enormous advertisements have attracted so much attention, has advertised himself into a fortune. He sends to the New York Times a note from the tax assessors informing him that he is rated at $100,000. This little note Mr. Bonner calls "a prize essay on the benefits of advertising," for to that he attributes his success, and by that he means to quadruple his fortune. He says:

"It certainly shows in a more forcible manner than any other document I have seen how a fortune can be made in a short space of time, especially as my personal estate last year was assessed only at two thousand dollars. But I have no idea of my taxes on one hundred thousand dollars of personal property. Rather than contribute so far an amount towards the support of the numerous scoundrels who plunder the City Treasury, I have concluded to expend it in advertising. But, perhaps, you may say that this will only prove a temporary relief, as advertising will doubtless increase its tolls, and, instead of being taxed for one hundred thousand dollars next year, I may be taxed for four hundred thousand."

FOREIGN PERSONAL ITEMS.—Mr. John H. Gough, it appears, has commenced legal proceedings against Dr. Lee, of Leids, for an alleged defamation of character, and the trial, it is expected, will shortly come on in the Law Courts in London.

Sigismon Steffolini has reappeared at the Paris Italian in the "Trovatore," and was warmly welcomed.

Father Ravignan, the eloquent preacher, so well known in the fashionable churches of Paris, is dangerously ill.

Official disputes from St. Petersburg say that Government and many of the nobles are really honestly bent on the emancipation of slaves.

The indefatigable Harriet Martineau has undertaken the settlement of the Indian question, in a volume of "Suggestions towards the future government of India."
